5. aim for a continuous improvement of Customer satisfaction;
6. promote the dissemination of the culture of the management system through appropriate information and training actions aimed at personnel at all company levels;
7. obtain the well-being of all interested parties, to obtain the well-being of the organization;
8. improve the security of information systems and preserve information by ensuring its availability, confidentiality and integrity.

In pursuing these objectives, the following actions are activated:

- a) identification of the context, of the significant stakeholders and their expectations, definition of internal and external factors, assessment of risks and opportunities and related consequent actions;

- b) organization of all production processes from a "customer point of view";
- c) continuous measurement of the degree of satisfaction of customers and interested parties;
- d) optimization of the Management System through identification and definition of processes and continuous enhancement of the human resources necessary for their implementation;
- e) verification and possible redefinition of the indicators defined for monitoring company processes and services provided;
- f) determination of objectives relating to the performance of company processes and services, as well as the systematic monitoring and review of data for the purpose of continuous improvement;
- g) definition, planning, implementation and verification of the improvement actions necessary for the achievement of increasingly ambitious objectives;
- h) determination of requirements and expectations, as well as evaluation of the satisfaction of all interested parties;
- i) search for new market niches and new business development opportunities, always with a view to quality and customer satisfaction;
- j) provide innovative services to maintain a leading position in its sector, offering the community and businesses services with high added value.

Finally, Reco 3.26 designs, implements and manages production and support processes that give confidence on compliance with legal requirements and that identify, where necessary, corrective, preventive and possible improvement actions.
